Supporting a Life Beyond Trauma Part I

This training contains sensitive content/topics around trauma that some people may find triggering. Participant discretion advised

Many of the individuals we support have a history of trauma. Also, the relationships that they have with us are often some of the most important ongoing relationships they may have outside of their family. These relationships have the potential to help work through the effects of trauma in order to have a life they can enjoy. Understanding trauma history can help prevent re-traumatization by well-meaning caregivers and community service providers.

This workshop is designed to provide an understanding of the effects of trauma and learn ways to respond that promote post traumatic growth and healthy relationships. This workshop will provide participants with:

- A definition of trauma informed care
- Explanations of various types of trauma and its impact and prevalence on people with ID/D.
- Recommendations for recognizing possible displays of trauma, PTSD symptoms, and potential triggers while being mindful of behavior as a trauma response
- A description of Staff's unintended role in re-traumatization and how we can work in a trauma informed way in order to support a life beyond trauma.

Supporting a Life Beyond Trauma Part II (must have taken Part 1)

This training is designed to help participants use the information from Part I to guide and inform their thinking and approach with the people they support. Participants will learn how to work from a trauma informed place rooted in mindfulness. We will explore how to create a safe space through person centered tools such as universal supports, charting a life course, and more that help prevent re-traumatization, support self-determination, and begin to build pathways to supporting a life beyond trauma. Participants will also learn self-care techniques so that they are able to help mitigate work related stress in order to bring their best self to their work.

A Life Like Any Other

George Santayana said, "Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it." Knowing the history of people with IDD in society provides us with an important context for understanding what our current history, values and services contribute to this ongoing story. We'll explore some of the social roles people with IDD have had in the past and how we can support people to develop and enjoy more meaningful social roles today and tomorrow. We'll discuss the gifts and talents that people with disabilities have to contribute to their communities and how we, as workers in any part of the system, can promote positive images and roles for people with disabilities. NOTE: this training satisfies the DDS NEO requirement for state operated program staff.

Understanding the People We Support

We work with people who are labeled with Intellectual and Developmental Disabilities (IDD), including Autism, and people with Acquired or Traumatic Brain Injury (ABI/TBI). In this session we talk about what those terms mean and what kinds of services are available to people through the Dept. of Developmental Services and our vendor providers. We will learn about ways to demonstrate respect for all by using People First language and discuss our roles as advocates and teachers with the individuals we support. NOTE: this training satisfies the DDS NEO requirement for state operated program staff.

Neutral Writing

Reports, progress summaries, logbook entries, and email are among the communication tools we use on a regular basis. These are also legal documents for which the writer is accountable. Clear and factual writing that is accurate, understandable, and objective is critical. Neutral writing aims to eliminate bias and inaccuracy by avoiding vague or confusing language or presenting personal opinions and conclusions as facts. Participants will practice using oral and written communication that is pertinent, complete, respectful, and easily understood.

Teams and Communication

In every part of an organization, our ability to perform our job responsibilities depends in our ability to work effectively as a member of a team. In many cases, members of a team are dispersed – across shifts, across programs, across geography. Positive relationships, collaboration, communication, team development, and conflict resolution are essential to a happy and effective team. Teams bring together people with diverse experiences, opinions, and worldviews. These differences make a team stronger but can also lead to miscommunication. As direct support professionals, it is especially important to maintain clear and respectful communication with all members of one's team. The strength of a team directly affects the quality of life of the people we support and makes our jobs more fun!

This training will identify the building blocks of communication and how they strengthen a supportive and collaborative work environment. Attendees will learn tips for effective communication within formal and informal teams and across a variety of environments and relationships. Supervisors are an important source of coaching, teaching, mentoring, and support to the employee and to the team as a whole. Attendees will learn to recognize their supervisor as a resource for professional development and on-the-job learning. Attendees will also be able to identify their own communication strengths and what they bring to the team, how to develop new skills with the support of their team, and ways teams can use conflict as an opportunity for learning and trust-building. NOTE: this training satisfies the DDS NEO requirement for state operated program staff.

See Me as a Whole Person

What comes to mind when you hear the word “sexuality?” If it’s being sexually active, that’s only one aspect. Since birth, sexuality is part of our personality, influencing our self-esteem, how we perceive ourselves, how others see us, and how we interact with the world. Sexually interested or not, sexually active or not, our sexuality is part of who we are. The session will provide a working definition of “sexuality,” explore how it is an integral part of personality and focus on how we can support people to develop a positive sense of their whole selves.
